Introduction

In September 1990, the United States Environmental Protection Agency (U.S. EPA), in consultation with the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources (WDNR), selected a plan for cleaning up the source of contamination, referred to as the Source Control Operable Unit (SCOU), at the Hagen Farm Superfund site in Dunkirk, Wisconsin. This progress report describes the types of activities that have been conducted or will be conducted for cleanup of the SCOU which began in July 1991. A brief description of investigation activities slated for the ground-water contamination, referred to as the Ground Water Control Operable Unit (GCOU) is described at the end of the report. U.S. EPA determined that the most efficient way to handle the investigation and cleanup of the site was to divide it into Operable Units. Because the source of contamination was known, it was decided that cleanup of the source should be initiated while further investigations of the ground water are being conducted.
